STANDING OF THE TEAMS.

When Big Ed Walsh is right, nothing can touch him. He was right yesterday, and the Chicago White Sox won the opening game from the Nationals, 8 to 0.

Gray Started Well.

The game from a Washington standpoint was a frost. Then came a pretty double steal engineered by Parent and Isbell. Street's throw would have killed Parent at third had Conroy held the ball. Dougherty fanned, but Purtell slashed a beauty into left center, scoring Parent and Isbell. Purtell started for second on the throwin and Street heaved wildly to the keystone bag. Tannehill cut a sizzling grounder past McBride and Purtell Batted for Dygert in the eighth

For two innings the Westerners were squelched, but in the seventh batting averages took a shoot upward and three more chalk marks graced the score board. Purtell banged the first ball pitched to center field. Tannehill's sacrifice placed center field. Tannehill's sacrifice placed him on second. Atz dumped one over 🐟 Conroy's head and Purtell crossed the plate on Owens' grounder to Gray, which unintentionally developed into a perfect squeeze play. Walsh hit to center, scoring Atz, took second on the throw-in, and ated on Hahn's wicked drive through McBride.

Snappy Double Play.

The Sox looked a bit dangerous in the eighth, when an unexpected double play smothered things. Just to show that somebody blundered by dubbing them the hitless wonders, great ball. Chicago jumped all over Gray's neck in the ninth and batted in two more runs. Purtell, first up, sent McBride a grounder in deep short, but a beautiful pick-up and quick heave beat the runner by a step. Tannehill did better, the ball shooting past AcBride at a hot clip; Lee tried to sneak down to third, but Street got him by two feet. Atz singled to left and stole second. Owens drove the ball down third base so hard that Conroy could not see it. Atz came home, and Owens scored a minute later on Walsh's safe smash.
